The Journal is aimed at encouraging the discussion and exchange of ideas and knowledge regarding issues that affect the access of agents to markets, and the development of innovation and intellectual property. Even though emphasis will be given to economic and legal analyses, the Journal will also welcome contributions from other perspectives, such as social sciences and business administration.

The Journal seeks to foster the analysis of competition theory and intellectual property issues, the dissemination of case studies, and the proposal of policy recommendations that are intended to enhance legal and institutional frameworks, as well as the performance of economic agents. From a geographical scope, the Journal will provide a global vision, emphasizing regional and national aspects, as well as the typical features of Peruvian reality.

The Journal will encourage the contribution of papers and research studies with a wide range of approaches, becoming an open forum of discussion for our readers and the community.

Legislation and Competition Policies in the Andean Community

Institutional Publications Series, 2005

This book, published on November 2005, examines the Andean countries' competition policies, as compared to those related, in particular, to the international experiences in Europe.

Peru. The National Interests in Competition Defense and Preferential Trade Agreements.

Institutional Publications Series, Number 2, November 2005.

This document has the purpose of being a guide in the identification of the national interests in the area of competition, and a number of insights upon the role of defense of competition in the expansion of markets. The initial chapters unfold the market's institutional setting and implications of the expansion of markets on a country like Peru. Subsequently, the meaning of defense of competition in the world and its scope in the national economy is analyzed. Finally, the role of the State in the negotiation of a Free Trade Agreement is assessed, and the main aspects of what could be a future agenda are explored.
